Fear of execution can play a motivating role in convincing potential murderers not to carry out their acts

While the prospect of life in prison may be frightening, surely death is a more daunting prospect

A 1985 study by Stephen K. Layson at the University of North Carolina showed that a single execution deters 18 murders

Heinous crimes often occur in the heat of the moment, with little consideration for their legal repercussions

For those who have suicidal thoughts, it rather induces crime.

Many of the studies are flawed, because the impact of capital punishment cannot be disentangled from other factors such as broader social trends, economic factors and demographic changes in a region
